Over 680 professionals from 27 countries in the Americas have received scholarships for graduate studies in health at Brazilian and Mexican Universities, thanks to agreements signed in 2014 between the Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization (PAHO/WHO), the Organization of American States (OAS), the Coimbra Group of Brazilian Universities (GCUB), and the Mexican National Science and Technology Council (CONACYT) and the Mexican Agency for International Development Cooperation (AMEXCID).

This strategic alliance allows the OAS scholarship program to cover health-related graduate studies and collaborate with PAHO/WHO to promote research for health and support human resources for health capacity with the goal of strengthening health systems.

The scholarship program is funded by the OAS and the partner organizations: GCUB, CONACYT and AMEXCID. The OAS administers the program while PAHO/WHO provides monitoring and evaluation, along with technical guidance on research for health to scholarship recipients by promoting the use of research to address regional policies and priorities. PAHO/WHO offers a comprehensive toolkit of resources related to the Policy on Research for Health (CD49/10) such as a "Research" dedicated site for the scholars, virtual course offerings, conference information, journal articles, and potential practicum opportunities.
